

Call For Paper

The Literary Scientist seeks to bridge the gap between multiple disciplines, fostering innovative research and creating a vibrant scholarly community. With a focus on the latest and most contemporary developments, The Literary Scientist (a peer-reviewed journal) provides a platform for researchers, scholars, and experts to contribute their valuable insights and explore the multifaceted relationship between Social Science, Literature, and Physical Science. By highlighting the confluence of these disciplines, the journal aims to shed light on the interconnectedness of human experience, culture, and the natural world.

“Literature through the Ages” is a contemporary topic with different types of thoughts and boundaries. Through the ages, where technology has mixed with humanities and artefacts, creates an alternate discourse. Different minds have different voices and thoughts about and around ‘literature’ and ‘the digital age’. This issue aims to provide students, research scholars, and faculties a platform to share new ideas and develop this area by sending papers.

Sub-themes for this issue are (not limited to) the following:

1. Tiny Tales, Micro Literature as a Mainstream Literature
2. Environmental Humanities
